My Blooming Brain by Kayla Hickman
Welcome to the Pikes Peak Region Brain Injury Resource Directory

This directory was created by the Pikes Peak Region Brain Injury Professionals Network. This is a group of professionals who specialize in treatment and assistance for people who have acquired or traumatic brain injuries. The group is an affiliate of the Brain Injury Alliance of Colorado.

The organizations listed in the directory all have a history of providing services to people with brain injuries. It is important to us that the organizations listed are able to understand the special needs of someone living with a brain injury. Each section was assembled by a professional in the field. Countless hours of work go into the project so the most up-to-date and complete information is provided. Huge thanks to Carol Roche and Carol Cochran, co-chairs, for their coordination of this effort.

For the first time ever editorial content has been added to the resource because of a grant provided by MINDSOURCE Brain Injury Network, formerly the Colorado Brain Injury Program. Their support enabled us to hire a freelancer writer to cover topics of interest to brain injury patients and their caregivers plus increase the distribution to 10,000 copies. Thanks to MINDSOURCE for helping make the directory a more complete resource!

The art on the cover was created by Art Romero. Kayla Hickman was the runner up. Her artwork is on the inside front cover. Daniel G. Walter was the literary grand prize winner for his poem “Praise,” found on page 2. All are brain injury survivors.

If you are unable to find what you are looking for in this directory, please feel free to contact the Brain Injury Alliance of Colorado at 1325 S. Colorado Blvd. B-300, Denver, CO 80222. Phone: 303-355-9969. They can also be found on the web at www.biacolorado.org. BIAC will be happy to assist you and has an online resource directory for the entire state of Colorado.

The Brain Injury Professionals Network would like to thank our sponsors: HealthSouth Rehabilitation Hospital, The Law Firm of Jaray and Webster, Penrose- St. Francis Rehabilitation, Brain Injury Alliance of Colorado, Rocky Mountain Brain Care, Operation TBI Freedom and Harmonized Brain Centers. Thanks also to Peak Vista, Amblicab, the Law Offices of J.C. “Pit” Martin and Support for Success.

Praise

Lost in darkness like a well
Covered up but I can’t tell
Is this my body or just my soul?
Can’t find a heartbeat it feels ice cold
Eyes stained by tears mouth covered by screams
Brain wondering why it sees nightmares and no dreams
Wanting awareness fighting to live
Asking for hope but hatred is what it gives
Movement is needed but the body fights
So why not give up and just leave it here
Give in to the darkness and the utter fear
Because grief doesn’t last forever and blood pumps hard
The heart is powerful and its very large
Wake up your insight and give way to strength
Those demons aren’t stronger then the power of praise
Your body and mind have much more to do
And your belief is strong, your belief is true...

Caregivers: What brain injury survivors want you to know

By Ravay Snow-Renner

Being a caregiver for someone who has sustained a brain injury is not always easy. So we interviewed some experts — brain injury survivors — and asked them what they would most like caregivers to know. Here’s a summary of what they said.

Have patience

As much as possible, be patient with the person you’re caring for. Realize that people with head injuries are very challenged, and their lives can be overwhelming in new and strange ways. It’s normal for them (and you) to feel a sense of loss about the injury, but it’s most helpful to them if you can be positive, stable, and accepting while they re-adjust to what one survivor called “the new normal.”

Another survivor said, “I cannot say enough how much it means to have those who love and care about you take a step back while you ‘reboot.’”

Take care of yourself

Be patient with yourself, too. It’s okay to admit that you don’t have all the answers. The healing process may be unpredictable, some days will be harder than others, and you may not always feel appreciated. So it’s important for you to find ways to nurture your own spirit. This could be something as simple as establishing some independent space and time just for yourself, like a weekly coffee meeting or a trip to the park.

Don’t be afraid to ask for help. Caregivers’ support groups, like the one out of Penrose Hospital’s Cancer Center, are there to help. These groups provide a forum for caregivers to communicate and help each other.

All survivors expressed tremendous appreciation and gratitude for the love and support of their caregivers.

Be an assertive advocate

When you’re dealing with all sorts of medical and rehab personnel, you may be treated like you’re just a number. You may not feel your particular concerns are being addressed. But you know the person with the injury better than the medical staff. Remember that, and personalize yourselves to medical and rehab staff, so that they see your unique case and will be more willing to listen to you. And they will see the person you’re caring for more as an individual and less as a number.

Allow your patient to make mistakes, but always work toward improvement

Sometimes it’s tempting to over-help survivors, but you should let them make their own mistakes at first. Don’t correct them initially, but do correct them later, on a gentle, achievable gradient. Remain positive and go forward, and then give them more chances to succeed at different goals. Writing down goals is helpful, too.

Stay strong and optimistic

The brain can make amazing comebacks from an injury. One survivor, who is now a caregiver, finds he is more optimistic about his charge’s progress than her rehab staff, because he has actually been there on the other side of recovery. He knows what is possible.

Know that you are making a tremendous difference in someone’s life

All survivors expressed tremendous appreciation and gratitude for the love and support of their caregivers.

SURVIVOR STORIES

Emily
In February, 1994, when Emily was a third-grade student, she sustained a traumatic brain injury in a car accident. She was airlifted to Poudre Valley Hospital, where she underwent emergency brain surgery. Although she was unable to return to school that year, she started the fourth grade the following fall, and had few physical recovery issues. She says that she victimized herself when she was a teen, but admits that this may have just been typical teenage angst and not the result of her brain injury.
Through school, she was an honors student in high school, and continued her education through college and graduate school. Currently she works as a social worker in the Denver area and says her functioning is as high as it’s ever been; she’s able to juggle her high-stress work with being a wife and a stepmother to three teenagers, noting that “if anything is going to test one’s abilities and patience, it’s that!”

Emily says that she would not be the same person today without having survived a brain injury. The injury not only impacted her studies in psychology and social services, but also her desire to come around full circle and serve others. A reunion with the doctor who had saved her life was what put things into perspective for her. “It was 20 years since I was released from his care but seeing him again after all that time and hearing … what the usual odds are made me finally get it… that my brain injury and recovery is about more than just me… and I am just so fortunate that I ended up on the positive side of it. I consider myself privileged every day.”

How to work effectively with the schools if your child sustains a brain injury

By Ravay Snow-Renner

There is no one-size-fits-all approach. How you work with the schools depends on the extent of your child’s injury and how quickly it’s diagnosed. Many players are involved in creating the optimal learning environment for an injured student, and that means adapting programs and targeting resources appropriately. Good communication among everyone – doctors, therapists, educational personnel, and parents – is key.

If you suspect a brain injury, the first step is to get a doctor’s examination and diagnosis. In cases of severe injuries or concussions sustained at a school event, medical staff will be involved immediately. But sometimes brain injuries occur that are not readily apparent. Some symptoms of a brain injury are mood changes, difficulty concentrating, trouble speaking, headaches, ringing in the ears, memory issues, nausea, fatigue, impaired motor skills, dizziness, and weakness. Brain injuries can be traumatic (caused by an external force), or non-traumatic (strokes, brain tumors, and infections). If you see these types of changes in your child, call your physician’s attention to it.

After a brain injury, several resources may be available to help your child return to school and continue learning. In some school districts, groups of educators, called BrainSTEP teams, have been trained in how to help students with brain injuries. These are not in every Colorado district yet, but the Colorado Department of Education (CDE) has trained teams in 14 districts, including Academy School District 20, Falcon School District 49, Fountain-Fort Carson School District 8, Pueblo District 70 and 3 BOCES, including the Pikes Peak BOCES. If your district does not yet have a BrainSTEPS team, be sure to find out who from your school district will assume the lead role in your child’s case, and work with them. The Youth Education Liaison at the Brain Injury Alliance of Colorado (BIAC) is another resource.

If your child has missed school, BrainSTEP members may work with you and your doctors to handle school re-entry.

With doctor input, BrainSTEP teams may develop learning plans geared for your child's particular needs. If the injury is severe they might develop a Section 504 plan (for students with disabilities) or an IEP (Individualized Education Plan), both of which help to adjust instruction as needed. Adjustments will vary on a case-by-case basis. (Some examples of adjustments include taping lessons, or allowing extra time for test-taking.) Your child may stay in a regular classroom or go into a self-contained classroom. Similar classroom adjustments happen if your child has sustained a milder brain injury, like a concussion, although they are expected to be shorter-term than for more severe injuries.

Teams will also monitor how your child does over time. Learning plans are subject to revision and will be changed if new learning issues arise or if the student no longer needs particular adjustments. As a parent, you will have important observations about your child and communicating them clearly with doctors and education personnel will help facilitate the healing and learning process.

Jim
Jim was a 16-year-old athlete and musician in the fall of 1985, when he sustained a traumatic brain injury in a car accident. After he regained consciousness, he was mute for two months. He reports that his reasoning was not really affected, but his ability to communicate was damaged, and he had also temporarily lost his skills in playing classical guitar. He says, “It was like I was a baby again. I had lost everything.”

After years of rehab though, Jim has been able to re-establish his communication skills, expressing himself in music through recording an album, through painting, and poetry. He has worked in a variety of different jobs and describes his lifestyle as that of a “starving artist.”

Jim says that knowing American Sign Language saved him because he was able to re-learn and communicate through sign much more quickly than through speech. His speech was slow and choppy for many years, until recently, when he began working with biofeedback and brain improvement games. He says these things made a huge improvement in his speech, even 25 years after the injury. Jim continues to work toward his goals, helped by his Christian faith. He says, “It’s like you’re a salmon swimming upstream. But you’re going to make it. And there’s a sort of opportunity in how you cope with these things and how you deal with what life throws at you.”

Survivor Stories

Dennis
In 2004, at age 58, Dennis suffered a brain injury when a sinus infection spread into his brain. After two surgeries to clear out the infection, he temporarily lost the use of his left side. He started on therapy while still in the ICU, regaining his handwriting (he is left-handed) and full mobility despite several health setbacks. Since his injury, Dennis retired from his job, and has become deeply involved with the brain injury community in the Colorado Springs area. Currently he provides care for his wife, who more recently suffered her own brain injury. According to him, “The devil threw me back, and the angels weren’t ready for her.”

Since his injury, Dennis has climbed Pikes Peak a total of 6 times, 5 times as part of the Pikes Peak Challenge. He also volunteers extensively in the community; he is a “rehab buddy” to newly injured patients at Penrose Hospital, and for many years, he helped lead a support group for brain injured. He also participates in a Caregivers Support Group through Penrose Cancer Center. He believes strongly that he is here for a reason, and giving back to the community has been part of his purpose. He says, “We are in places by design. It’s up to us to recognize we have a job to do. When you volunteer, you try to give, but you end up receiving more than you expect.”

Brain injury resources

MINDSOURCE, formerly known as The Colorado Brain Injury Program, was established in 2002 to provide care coordination and services to children and adults with brain injuries, as well as fund education and research regarding brain injury in Colorado. Revenue for this program comes from surcharges placed on traffic ticket convictions for speeding, the children’s helmet law, DUI, and DWAI. The program partners with the Brain Injury Alliance of Colorado, Department of Education, and the Department of Public Health and Environment to provide comprehensive support across the state. Please visit bicolorado.org for more information.

What is a brain injury?

Acquired brain injury is an injury to the brain that has occurred after birth, and which is not hereditary, congenital, or degenerative. Causes include external forces applied to the head and or neck (traumatic brain injury), anoxic/hypoxic injury (cardiac arrest, carbon monoxide poisoning, airway obstruction, hemorrhage, drowning), intracranial surgery, infectious diseases, seizure disorders, toxic exposure (substance abuse, ingestion of lead, inhalation of volatile agents), aneurysms, and vascular obstruction (stroke).

Brain injury affects the whole person, including changes in the physical, emotional, and cognitive areas of the body. These changes can impact how a person reacts to his or her daily life, including school and work, and how s/he manages his or her finances. Relationships and a person’s well-being are determined by how well he or she can manage these challenges. The road can seem long and insurmountable, especially without help.
