Employment as a Social Determinant of Health

- Unemployment can have negative health consequences
- Those who are unemployed report feelings of depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, and demoralization
- Unemployed individuals tend to suffer more from stress-related illnesses such as high blood pressure, stroke, heart attack, heart disease, and arthritis

- Job benefits such as health insurance, paid sick leave, and parental leave can affect the health of employed individuals
- Periods of economic recession are possibly associated with higher prevalence of mental health and substance use disorders, and other physical health concerns
  - Employment is a protective factor (SAMHSA, 2020)
Empowering

Person-Centeredness, Social Roles, & Integration
Person-Centeredness

- Taking the needed time to learn about and understand the whole person
- Finding and understanding what is important to someone and balancing it with what is also important for them in their life
- Helping and supporting people get better lives...not just better paper
- Guided by values and practice principles that acknowledge people (not service providers) are the experts regarding their lives and needs
- A practitioner thinks about the the individuals needs versus the needs of the system (Jones, nd)
Social Role Valorization

- Originating in Scandinavia in the 1960s, normalization meant “making available to all people with disabilities the patterns of life and conditions of everyday living which are as close as possible to the regular circumstances and ways of life or society.” (www.socialrolevalorization.com)

- Wolf Wolfensberger, the founder of normalization, replaced the word ‘Normalization’ with Social Role Valorization to better describe the importance of social roles in society
  - The more valued someone is for their role, the more likely they are to experience a “good life”

- According to an article by John Armonstrong, there are two major ways of achieving this: 1) to enhance the competencies of people, and 2) to enhance the social image of people
Integration

- People with disabilities are visible in the workplace to the public, which allows society to see the value and capabilities of all individuals
  - Enhancing awareness, knowledge, and the social image of people (Social Role Valorization Theory)
- When integrated in a workplace, people with disabilities can experience authentic interpersonal interactions with co-workers, customers, & supervisors
- Full Inclusion!
Empowerment

Self-Determination, Informed Choice, & Supported Decision Making
Self-Determination

- Self-Determination: the ability to know and believe in oneself toward achieving something that is wanted
- Self-determination contributes to positive results in areas such as employment, education, community living, and improved quality of life (Wehmyer et al., 2003)
- Self-determination is important and drives the employment journey for an individual
- Focuses on the individual making their decisions and paving the direction of their employment journey
Informed Choice

- Informed Choice is an important concept of employment and supporting individuals with disabilities across all areas of their lives.
- Informed Choice is the individual's choice based on being provided with all information necessary to make their decision.
  - This could be information from family members, professionals, and other members of the individual's support team.
- Ensuring the individual has all pertinent information to make an informed decision and supporting that decision is key!
Supported Decision Making

- Supported Decision Making is a natural process that people use when making important decisions.
- Supported Decision Making is a set of strategies that can help individuals with disabilities have more control over their lives and future.
  - It involves family, friends, and other support team members working together with individuals in making complex decisions.
- Supported Decision Making empowers people with disabilities to ask for support where and when they need it from family members, friends, and professionals.
Supported Decision Making: The Support

- Similar to people without disabilities, sometimes people with disabilities need support in making decisions
  - May need someone to explain their options
  - May need someone to explain the outcomes when they make a choice
  - May need support with understanding information provided by doctors, lawyers, providers, employers, and other support staff
  - May need support with communicating what they want and need
